SCAVOLINI & DIESEL

Open workshop kitchen and bathroom project

After the enormous success of the Diesel Social Kitchen, presented at Eurocucina 2012, Scavolini and Diesel introduce Diesel Open Workshop: the new program that spans both kitchen and bathroom, continuing the development of a style in which design meets informality, with impeccable balance.

In this project, a warm approach to the domestic environment is clear, with a strong industrial vibe. The spaces are interpreted as a place of intimacy, personality and, at the same time, sociality. At the centre, remarkable attention to style, right down to the detailing, the materials and the textures, to create simple geometry but with attractive designs, beloved by an audience that seeks "apparent" simplicity of form.

From an architectural point of view, the character of the Diesel Open Workshop is clear in the modular metallic structures made of iron tubing, a clear industrial twist, which, thanks to the clever mix of solids and voids, allows the construction of compositions with an unmistakable metropolitan soul, accentuated by the use of opaque shades that combine to create comfortable and casual environments.

The metal fits into this model, marking the profiles of the handle grips, the supports and the glass door frame. The latter, in aluminium, is key, continuing the play on volumes which characterises the collection. Two versions are available - smoked glass with black mesh and flutes glass - while Matt and Glossy Lacquered options are available in all the colours of Scavolini's range.³ decorative melamine finishes are also available.

The Diesel Open Workshop features the introduction of a new handle grip on the top of the door, aluminium edging stretching along the entire length, both horizontally (for bases) and vertically (for columns). Another distinctive feature is the top with mirror-polished edges, with metal corners on the four points.

The bathroom

For the first time, the collaboration between Scavolini and Diesel also extends to the bathroom, with a charming and original proposal.

The Industrial style is represented here by significant use of metal, which is also found in the new modular "shelving" system - which allows the insertion of shelves, open compartments, wall and base units of different sizes, on the ground or wall-mounted.

New countertop round and rectangular shaped washbasins with exclusive design are available in white Moneralmarmo and in different marble colours.

The project showcases new custom-designed taps and iron supports with covers for bases, medium-height units, and consoles. A combination of furnishings and solutions which, diverse in composition, come together to create perfect stylistic balance.

Like for the kitchen, new handle grips have been developed, mounted on the top of the door.

New mirror models complete the bathroom range, key customisation elements which highlight the uniqueness of the collection.

The Diesel Open Workshop kitchen and bathroom programme is available in several different configurations that combine materials and nuances - for doors, floors, profiles and glass - and represent the souls of the project, to best showcase the various facets of this model with a strong character.
